Trump impeachment hearings focus on Ukraine pressure campaign in first day

Chairman Adam Schiff (C), Democrat of California, gives an opening statement during the first public hearings held by the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence as part of the impeachment inquiry into U.S. President Donald Trump, with witnesses Ukrainian Ambassador William Taylor and Deputy Assistant Secretary George Kent testifying on Capitol Hill in Washington, DC. REUTERS

1 The top U.S. diplomat in Ukraine, testifying in the first televised hearing of the impeachment inquiry against President Donald Trump, on Wednesday linked the president more directly to a pressure campaign on Ukraine to conduct investigations that would benefit him politically.

William Taylor was one of two career diplomats who testified before the U.S. House of Representatives Intelligence Committee as a crucial new phase began in the impeachment inquiry that threatens Trump's presidency even as he seeks re-election in 2020.

Both Taylor and George Kent testified about their concerns about pressure by Trump and allies to get Ukraine to investigate Democratic political rival Joe Biden in a dramatic hearing that pitted Democratic and Republican lawmakers against each other.

While the hearing turned contentious at times – including sniping between lawmakers – the low-key testimony given by the two witnesses may have fallen short of giving the Democrats the ammunition they need to advance their argument that Trump has committed misdeeds worthy of ousting him from office.

> "Ambassador Sondland responded that President Trump cares more about the investigations of Biden, which Giuliani was pressing for."

An important revelation came from Taylor, acting ambassador to Ukraine, who pointed to the Republican president's keen interest in getting Ukraine to investigate Biden, a former vice president, and reiterated his understanding that $391 million in U.S. security aid was withheld from Kiev unless it cooperated.

Taylor said a member of his staff overheard a July 26 phone call between Trump and Gordon Sondland, a former political donor appointed as a senior diplomat, in which the Republican president asked about those investigations and Sondland told him that the Ukrainians were ready to proceed.

Following the call – which occurred a day after Trump had asked Ukraine's president during a phone call to conduct these investigations – the staff member asked Sondland, the U.S. ambassador to the European Union, what Trump thought about Ukraine, Taylor said.

"Ambassador Sondland responded that President Trump cares more about the investigations of Biden, which Giuliani was pressing for," Taylor testified, referring to Trump's personal lawyer Rudy Giuliani.

Asked by Adam Schiff, the committee's Democratic chairman, if that meant Trump cared more about the investigations than about Ukraine, Taylor said, "Yes, sir."

With a potential tv audience of tens of millions, Schiff opened the first US impeachment drama in two decades. REUTERS

Former Massachusetts governor Deval Patrick joining race for White House: reports

2 Former Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick has told supporters he will join the Democratic race and run for president, media outlets including the New York Times reported on Wednesday.

Patrick, who was the state's first African-American governor and is close to former President Barack Obama, is widely respected within the Democratic party but faces a steep uphill climb if he joins the race.

He would join a field of nearly 20 candidates vying for the party's nod to run against Republican Donald Trump in 2020, most of whom have failed to win more than a few percentage points of support in national and state polls. He has already missed deadlines to get on the ballot in Alabama and Arkansas, as well as for the party's upcoming debate in Atlanta.

The field is currently dominated by former Vice President Joe Biden, a moderate, and two liberals: U.S. Senator Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts and U.S. Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont.

On Tuesday, former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg also took steps to underpin a possible run, filing paperwork to appear on the primary ballot in Arkansas. The same day, former Democratic standard-bearer Hillary Clinton gained attention when she refused to rule out a possible run in a BBC interview.

Patrick, 63, is a Harvard-trained lawyer and two-term former governor who has been working as a managing director of Boston investment firm Bain Capital since 2015, running a socially responsible investing fund.

Disney+ streaming exceeds 10 million sign-ups

3 Walt Disney Co on Wednesday said its new streaming service, Disney+, reached 10 million sign-ups since launching the previous day from "extraordinary consumer demand," sending shares up 3.5%. The strong first day performance appears to establish Disney as a leading player in the streaming wars that pit it against industry leader Netflix Inc, Amazon.com Inc's Prime Video service, Apple Inc's Apple TV+ and AT&T Inc's forthcoming HBO Max service. And although Disney's day one numbers were more than three-times the size of some forecasts, it was not immediately clear how many of these new customers were from free promotions. All new and existing Verizon unlimited wireless customers have been eligible for a free, one-year subscription to Disney+. REUTERS

Facebook removes 3.2 billion fake accounts

4 Facebook Inc removed 3.2 billion fake accounts between April and September this year, along with millions of posts depicting child abuse and suicide, according to its latest content moderation report released on Wednesday. That more than doubles the number of fake accounts taken down during the same period last year, when 1.55 billion accounts were removed, according to the report. The world's biggest social network also disclosed for the first time how many posts it removed from popular photo-sharing app Instagram, which has been identified as a growing area of concern about fake news by disinformation researchers. Proactive detection of violating content was lower across all categories on Instagram than on Facebook's flagship app, where the company initially implemented many of its detection tools. REUTERS

Philly PD says that this is "potentially one of the worst cases of child abuse anyone has ever seen."

BECCA GLASSER-BAKER
Rebecca.Glasser@metro.us

On Tuesday, the caretaker of Zya Singleton, a 4-year-old girl was charged.

ABC reports that Philly PD are calling this "potentially one of the worst cases of child abuse anyone has ever seen."

The caretaker, identified as Samilya Brown, 38, was charged with Aggravated Assault, Simple Assault, Endangering the Welfare, Corruption of Minors, Tampering with Evidence and related offenses.

Officials shared in a news conference that Zya had been abused for years. The victim was found with burns on her arm and leg, broken bones, open wounds, homemade stitches in her mouth, puncture wounds and bite marks.

ABC reports that on Oct. 30, officials were called to a report of a fall in the 1700 block of Folsom Street. Brown initially said that the child had fallen out of the second-story window while playing with a cat.

It was reported that when police arrived, they knew something was off. During a press conference, Assistant District Attorney Chesley Lightsey said that, "When police arrived she was in a second-floor bathroom being put in cold water."

Lightsey continued, "We believe there was no fall."

Zya was rushed to Thomas Jefferson University Hospital and was transferred to CHOP, where the 4-year-old died from complications due to injuries on Nov. 3.

District Attorney Larry Krasner said, "This is a horrific, heartbreaking case of abuse, neglect, and murder of an innocent, defenseless child."

Officials say the most recent photos of Zya were taken in 2017. It was reported that officials have a notarized letter from 2016 of Zya's biological mother, Jasmine Singleton, giving Zya's custody to Samilya Brown.

Jasmine Singleton, the biological mother of Zya, has spoken out about her daughter's death. Singleton explained to outlets that she did not have the means to care for Zya and left the child in the care of family friend.

> "This is a horrific, heartbreaking case of abuse, neglect, and murder of an innocent, defenseless child."
> District Attorney Larry Krasner

Singleton was called to the hospital and was originally pretty positive about seeing her daughter again – until she saw the heartbreaking injuries inflicted upon her. She told CBS that, "You can't prepare no mom for what I walked in that room and saw. My baby's face was destroyed; all she had was eyes and a head that was taped up with burns on her body. I walked into the room and walked out."

When asked about Brown, Singleton said that "I hope she burns in this jail cell."

Gaza death toll reaches 23 in second day of escalation

Injuries, but no deaths, reported in Israel.

Israeli air strikes killed 13 Palestinians in Gaza on Wednesday, medical officials said, raising the Palestinian death toll to 23 over a two-day escalation in violence since Israel launched strikes to kill an Islamic Jihad commander.

From early morning Gaza militants fired rockets into Israel and the Israeli military struck from the air, resuming after an overnight lull. There were reports of injuries but no deaths inside Israel, where the military said it shot many of the rockets down with air defences.

The bodies of six people were brought to Gaza's Shifa hospital in taxis and ambulances early Wednesday, as relatives wept and screamed. Medics and witnesses said they were civilians who lived in densely populated neighbourhoods.

In the north of Gaza City, family members said Rafat Ayyad and his two sons Islam, 25, and Ameer, aged 9, were killed by Israeli fire while rushing to hospital to visit another son who had earlier been injured in a separate attack.

"I got wounded and I called my father. He was coming to see me in hospital and two of my brothers were with him on the motorcycle when they were hit by Israel," Loay Ayyad, 18, told Reuters during the funeral.

The Israeli military said that it had struck at least five rocket squads on Wednesday morning. Other targets included a rocket warhead manufacturing facility, an Islamic Jihad headquarters and a weapons storage site. Islamic Jihad confirmed that two of its militants were killed in separate strikes.

The fighting, the worst in months, erupted on Tuesday after Israel killed Baha Abu Al-Atta, a senior commander of the Iran-backed Islamic Jihad militant group, accusing him of masterminding and planning attacks against Israel.

In response to the killing of Atta and his wife, Islamic Jihad fired about 200 rockets into Israel on Tuesday, resuming on Wednesday morning.

"We will not allow the enemy to return to the policy of cowardly assassination under any circumstances," said a statement by the 'Joint Command' of Palestinian armed factions.

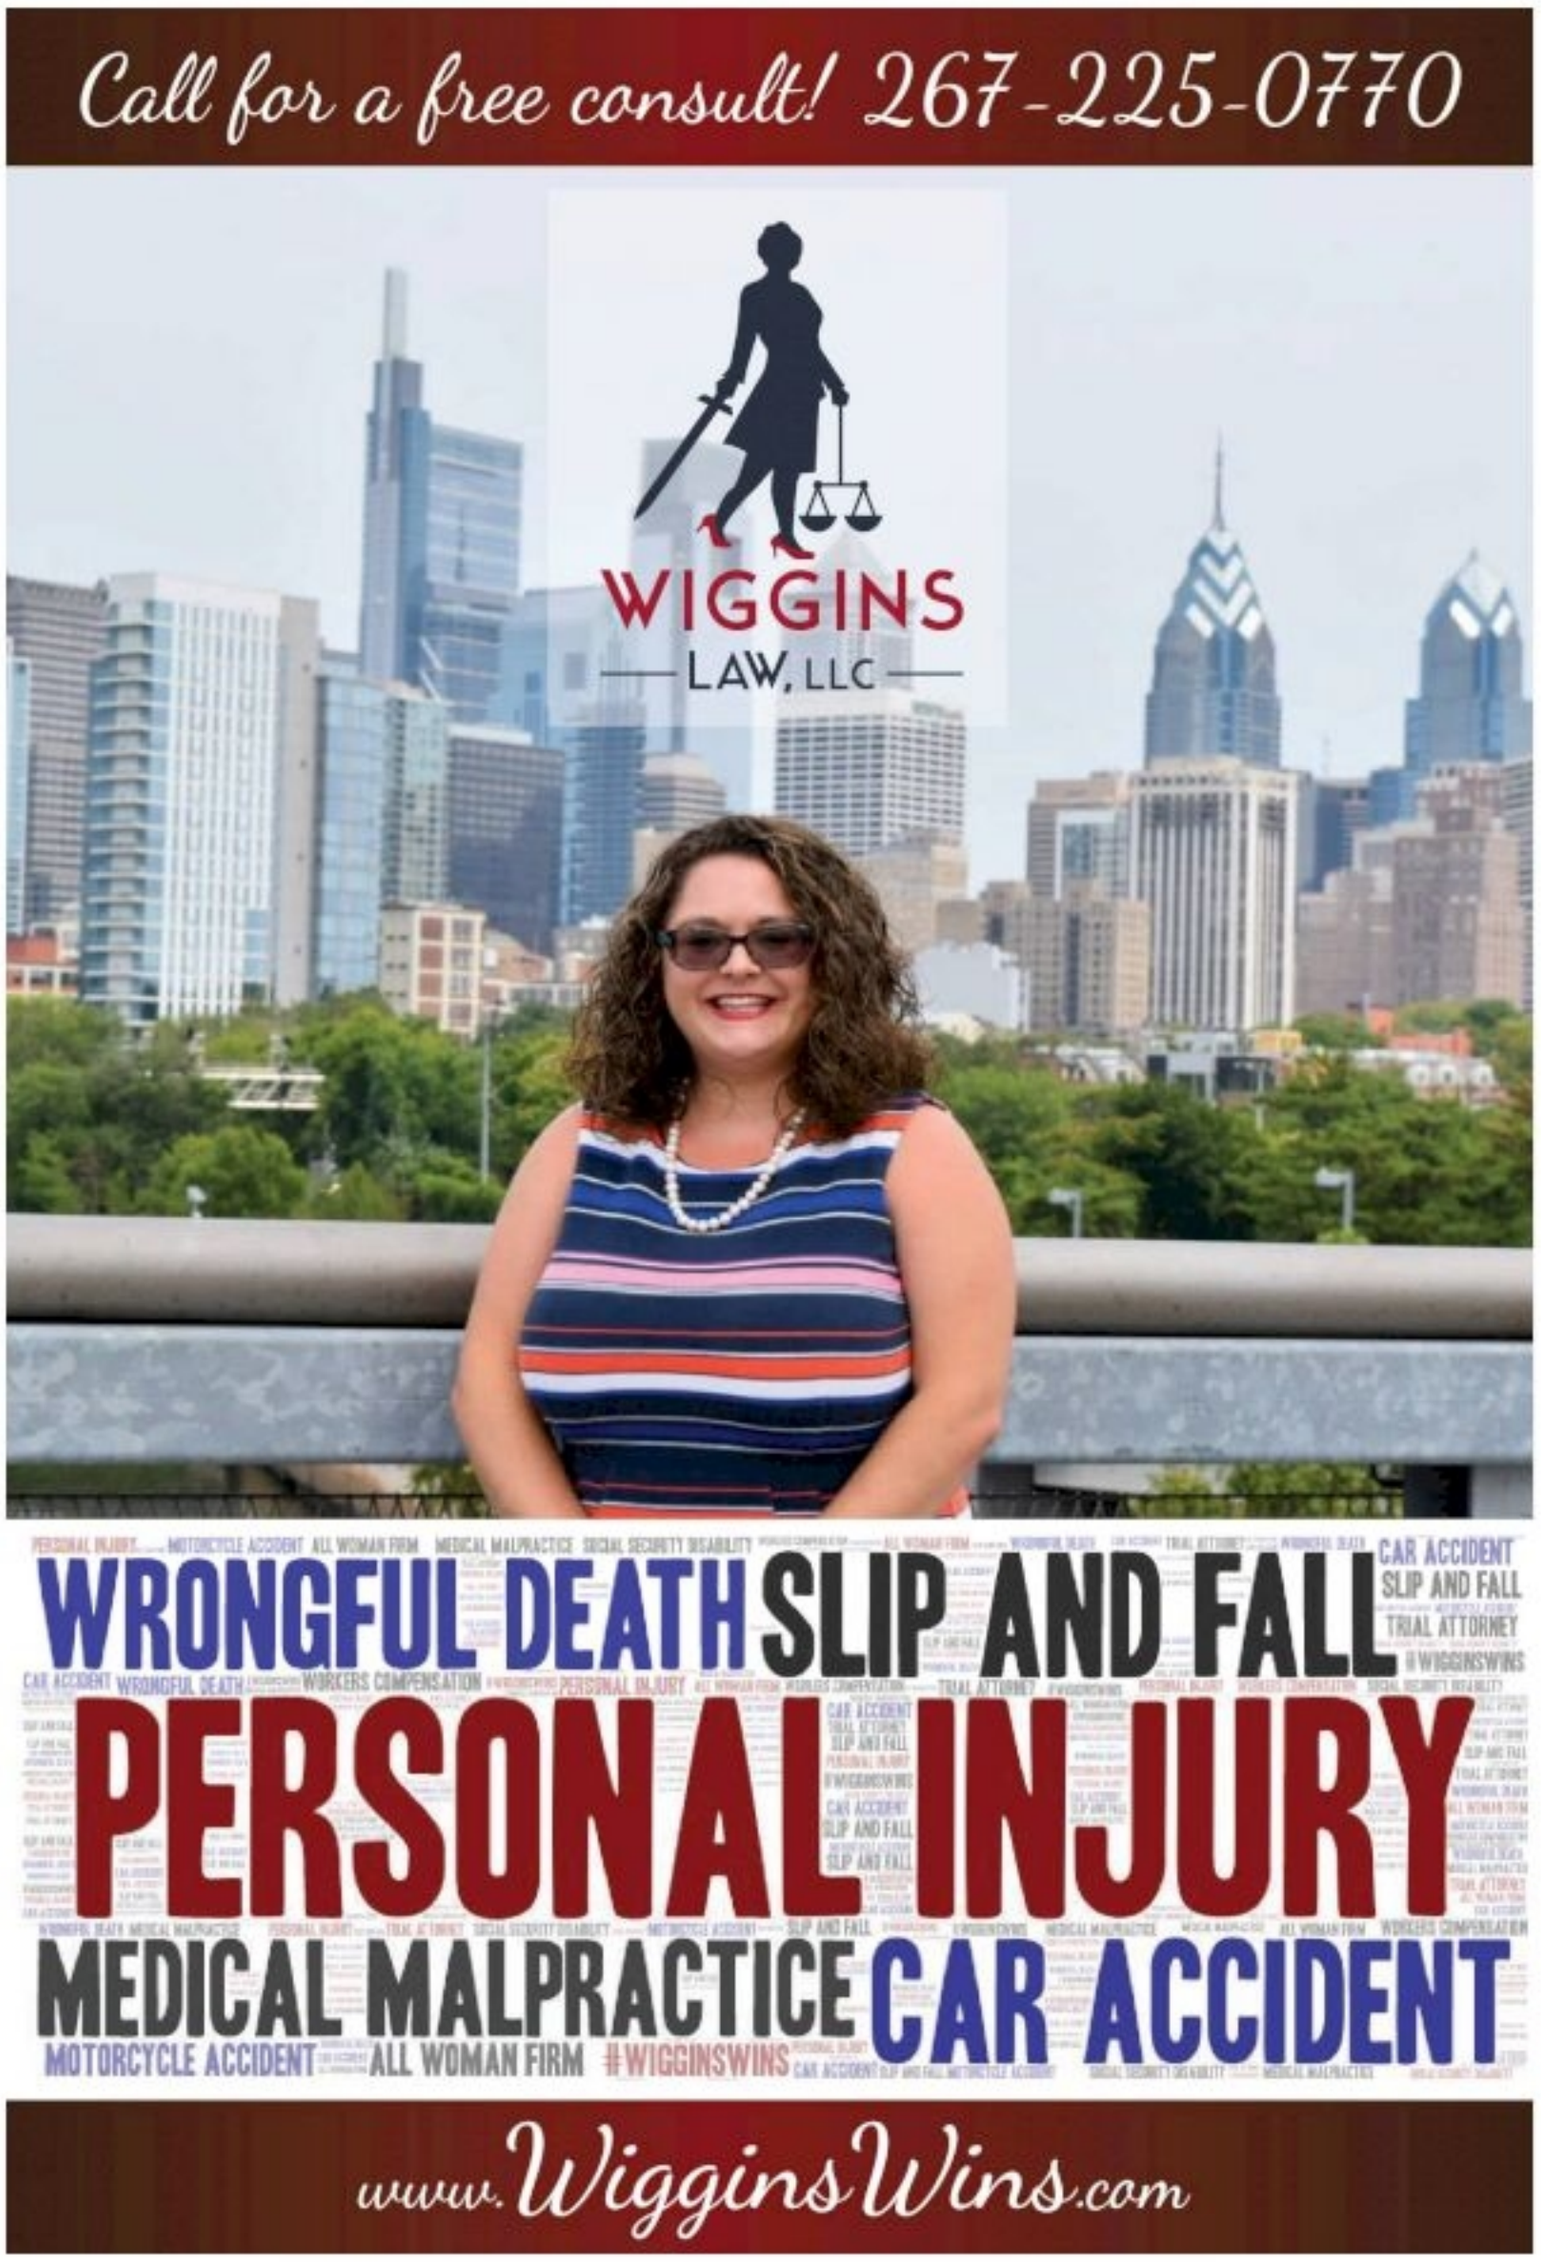
> "We will not allow the enemy to return to the policy of cowardly assassination under any circumstances," > said a statement by the 'Joint Command' of Palestinian armed factions.

The joint command includes Hamas, the much larger Islamist group that controls Gaza. But while Hamas appeared to be giving the green light for Islamic Jihad to continue, the larger group did not appear to be launching rockets itself, a decision that could reduce the likelihood of the violence escalating further.

Hamas and Israel have managed to defuse previous confrontations and to avoid a full-scale conflict for the past five years. REUTERS



Here's what Americans really think about Thanksgiving foods

A new study by Grubhub shows just what Americans are really eating and enjoying on Thanksgiving. The study breaks down what dishes are the most coveted during this holiday season, and some of the results are quite shocking.

It turns out that Thanksgiving's most popular foods are breakfast options. The study shows that Belgian waffles, chocolate chip pancakes, eggs benedict, corned beef hash and egg, and French toast rose most in popularity on Thanksgiving day compared to other Thursdays in November 2018. Surprisingly, folks are opting for sweet options pre-turkey.

Turkey – perhaps the dish most synonymous with Thanksgiving – isn't actually consumed in its highest annual quantities on Thanksgiving day. The number one holiday surpassing Thanksgiving for turkey-lovers is actually New Year's Eve.

Although turkey is well-loved on its own, the most popular turkey dishes in 2019 are turkey cranberry melt, turkey bacon avocado wrap, honey glazed turkey, and turkey and bacon club. It's interesting to note that the turkey cranberry melt that tops the lists is reminiscent of a Thanksgiving meal.

Other Thanksgiving favorites are desserts, specifically pies. When it comes to Thanksgiving pies, usually folks think about pumpkin pie and sweet potato pie; however, those are not the most sought after pies this holiday season. Pumpkin pie and sweet potato pie didn't even rank in the top five favorite pies.

The study shows that the most popular Thanksgiving pies are not what you might think. The most popular Thanksgiving pies are lemon meringue pie, blueberry pie, coconut custard pie and pecan pie – with apple rounding out the top five.

When people are tired of their leftovers, they tend to go for Tex-Mex and Asian-inspired dishes post-Thanksgiving. BECCA GLASSER-BAKER

Here are the most popular dishes for the weekend after Thanksgiving, according to Grubhub:

- Beef barbacoa taco
- Ramen bowl
- Cheesy chicken empanada
- Tofu miso soup
- Steamed shrimp shumai

A fossil of a lower jaw of the large extinct ape Gigantopithecus blacki, found in Chuifeng cave in ChinaÕs Guangxi region.
REUTERS

China's huge mysterious extinct ape 'Giganto' was an orangutan cousin

By some estimates, the ape reached up to 10 feet tall.

Genetic material extracted from a 1.9 million-year-old fossil tooth from southern China shows that the world's largest-known ape – an extinct creature dubbed "Giganto" that once inhabited Southeast Asia – was an oversized cousin of today's orangutans.

The findings, announced on Wednesday, shed light on a species, called Gigantopithecus blacki, that has been shrouded in mystery because its fossil remains are so sparse – just a collection of teeth and remnants of several lower jaws.

By some estimates, Gigantopithecus reached up to 10 feet (3 meters) tall, making it not only the largest-known ape but the biggest primate, the mammalian group that includes lemurs, monkeys, apes and humans.

Scientists were able to obtain genetic material – dental enamel proteins – from a broken molar with thick enamel discovered in Chuifeng Cave in China's Guangxi region. The researchers concluded the tooth may have belonged to an adult female.

"Our data, for the first time, provides independent molecular evidence that the closest living relative of Gigantopithecus is the modern orangutan," said University of Copenhagen molecular anthropologist Frido Welker, lead author of the study published in the journal Nature.

"Not only do proteins survive, but they survive in sufficient quantities to enable resolving the evolutionary relationships between Giganto and extant great apes," Welker added, referring to the group that includes orangutans, gorillas, bonobos and chimpanzees.

The orangutan and Gigantopithecus evolutionary lineages split about 12 million years ago, the researchers said.

"A long-unresolved issue comes to a solution," said paleoanthropologist and study co-author Wei Wang of Shandong University in China. "Its origin and evolution have puzzled paleoanthropologists for more than half a century."

12M

The orangutan and Gigantopithecus evolutionary lineages split about 12 million years ago, the researchers said.

It marked the first time that genetic material this old has been recovered from a fossil found in a warm, humid environment – conditions usually inhospitable to such preservation. The researchers expressed hope the same technique can be used on other fossils, perhaps including species in the human evolutionary lineage.

Wang said Gigantopithecus may have had an orangutan-like appearance and most likely was a ground-dweller, unlike orangutans, which spend most of their time in trees. It likely had a plant-based diet, perhaps eating sweet foods like fruit in forested environments, judging from the cavities seen in its teeth, Wang said.

Gigantopithecus appeared roughly 2 million years ago and went extinct about 300,000 years ago for reasons not fully understood. Wang said environmental and climate changes may be to blame.

Our species, Homo sapiens, first appeared about 300,000 years ago in Africa, only later reaching Southeast Asia, meaning it is unlikely the two species met. REUTERS

Massive mural of Greta Thunberg stares down at San Francisco

Mural painted by Argentine street artist Andres Petreselli.

A massive portrait of Greta Thunberg gazed down onto San Francisco on Tuesday night after an artist unveiled a mural of the Swedish teen activist in a bid to remind residents of the dangers posed by climate change.

The 60-foot tall, 30-foot wide (18-by-9 meter) mural was revealed hours after Thunberg announced on Twitter that she would be leaving the United States by boat on Wednesday, headed for a United Nations climate change conference in Madrid in December.

The teenager rejects air travel because of its high levels of greenhouse gas emissions.

Argentine street artist Andres Petreselli, who signs his work Cobre, says the portrait of Thunberg, 16, was unusual because he typically does not address politics, religion or sports.

"But, this one is ... I feel connected with the politics behind (it) because I think it is real and if I have to compare it with the rest of my murals, this is the most political one that I ever made," the 32-year-old said as he sat on a roof with the mural behind him.

Petreselli previously painted a since-demolished mural of the late actor Robin Williams in San Francisco.

Paul Scott, the executive director of OneAtmosphere.org, the San Francisco nonprofit that funded the work, said he hoped passers-by would be "touched" by the image of Thunberg, who has mobilized a global youth movement against climate change.

"We are really just hoping that it stops and makes them think, that this will amplify Greta's message, that people will start to understand the clear call for action that she is sending out," Scott said.

Thunberg has spent the last three months in North America after arriving in New York City by boat on Aug. 28, delivering a speech at a United Nations climate summit there in September.

In her Twitter post on Tuesday she said she would set sail from Virginia in the morning on a 48-foot catamaran whose owners have offered her a ride across the Atlantic. REUTERS

Chicago's cold blast spells concern for the city's homeless

Snow and ice collects on Cloud Gate sculpture in Millennium Park as severe weather hits Chicago, Illinois. REUTERS

Homeless advocates in Chicago were closely monitoring wind chill temperatures on Tuesday as an early season blast of arctic air swept across the eastern two-thirds of the United States.

The city of Chicago, where 86,000 homeless people live, opened its six warming shelters over the last few days as unseasonably cold temperatures dipped into the teens with wind chills into the single digits during the morning, according to the National Weather Service (NWS).

"It's incredibly concerning that we are experiencing this level of cold this early in the season," said Doug Schenkelberg, director of the Chicago Coalition for the Homeless.

The NWS said the Chicago metro area along with many major cities in the Midwest and East Coast and across the South would experience numerous record lows for a Nov. 12 or 13, with temperatures averaging 20 to 30 degrees below normal.

"It's significantly earlier than we normally would see a change in the jet stream," said Ed Shimon, a NWS meteorologist. "We actually have a cold front already blasting down to Florida and off the Gulf Coast ... so records are being broken all over the place."

16K

About 16,000 people sleep each night on the Chicago streets and shelters, Schenkelberg said. He added that the key to dealing with homelessness in extreme weather conditions ultimately is finding permanent supportive housing for the homeless.

The bitter cold prompted Cornerstone Community Outreach, on Chicago's North Side, to place cots in its dining room to accommodate the influx of homeless people a month earlier than it usually does each winter.

"We have seen an uptick of people coming," said Sandra Ramsey, executive director of Cornerstone Community Outreach. "From the looks of it, it spells out that we will have a long winter."

Ramsey said she was worried about the homeless people who suffer from mental illness and refuse to go inside, opting to live under viaducts and in alleyways even amid deadly cold.

"It takes time and relationships to get these people ... to come in on terribly cold nights," Ramsey said. "But then they go back out."

About 16,000 people sleep each night on the Chicago streets and shelters, Schenkelberg said. He added that the key to dealing with homelessness in extreme weather conditions ultimately is finding permanent supportive housing for the homeless.

"It's never an easy time to be homeless regardless of the weather and when you add extreme weather like this into the mix, it makes life that much more difficult for people experiencing it," he said. REUTERS

MetLife sued for gender discrimination by ex-chief administrative officer

Former senior VP verbally attacked and underpaid.

A MetLife Inc. building is shown in Irvine, California. REUTERS

MetLife Inc was sued for gender discrimination on Wednesday by a female former senior vice president who said she was underpaid, called a "bitch" and told she had to "choose between being pretty and being smart" while working at the insurance company.

Mona Moazzaz, who served as chief administrative officer in MetLife's global technology and operations department, said in a lawsuit filed in federal court in Manhattan that she was retaliated against and ultimately fired in May after authoring a document calling attention a lack of diversity at the company and other issues.

"We believe the allegations are without merit and plan to defend this matter vigorously," MetLife spokesman Randy Clerihue said in an email.

"It is completely unacceptable for companies to pay women hundreds of thousands of dollars less than men who do the same or less work," said Michael Willemin of the law firm Wigdor, who represents Moazzaz, in a statement.

Moazzaz, who joined MetLife in 2012, said in her lawsuit that she was paid hundreds of thousands of dollars less than multiple men with similar or lesser responsibilities and unfairly passed over for promotion.

She said that a human resources executive referred to her as a "bitch" and repeatedly called her "the little one" rather than using her name.

Moazzaz said a male "leadership coach" the company assigned to her told her she needed to "choose between being pretty and being smart because men can't put you in both boxes" if she wanted to be promoted.

In 2018, Moazzaz said, she authored a "candidate strategy" for a MetLife executive, Martin Lippert, who was seeking to become its next CEO. Among other things, the document said MetLife had fallen short in hiring minorities and promoting women.

Lippert lost out to current MetLife CEO Michel Khalaf. Moazzaz said she was fired eight days after Khalaf took over.

Khalaf and other MetLife executives are also named as defendants in the lawsuit, which is brought under federal and New York law and seeks unspecified monetary damages. REUTERS

North Korea warns of retaliation against U.S-South Korea military drills

REUTERS

North Korea threatened on Wednesday to retaliate if the United States goes ahead with scheduled military drills with South Korea, ramping up pressure on Washington to change course as a year-end North Korean deadline for U.S. flexibility approaches.

The statement came even though Washington said last week that the joint aerial exercise planned for next month would be reduced in scope from previous drills.

"It is self-defense rights" to retaliate against any move which threatens its sovereignty and security, according to a statement from the State Affairs Commission, without elaborating.

It is rare for the commission, the supreme governing body chaired by North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, to release a statement.

Last week, a senior North Korean diplomat also blamed the U.S. joint aerial drill for "throwing cold water" over talks with Washington. Pyongyang opposes U.S.-South Korean joint military exercises, viewing them as a rehearsal for invasion.

In its latest statement, Pyongyang said it had taken measures to calm Washington's concerns but that the United States had failed to reciprocate, leaving it with a "feeling of betrayal."

Asked to comment on the North Korea statement, the U.S. State Department made no reference to the military exercises. REUTERS

SLOW WALKERS

Okay, step by step. You can do it. We all have a place to be. We can get there together if we ... all do our part to pick up the pace just a LITTLE bit. No, don't look up at that billboard. It might be there tomorrow, it might not. That's not important right now. What's important is we get where we're going.

In a hurry, Metro US reader

The Angry Crab Spaghetti. HIGH STREET ON MARKET

High Street on Market is now offering dinner 7 nights a week and even brought back an old favorite.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

High Street on Market has always been known for its delicious take on seasonal flavors, detail to presentation and overall tasty dishes that many diners simply can't forget. Now all High Street fans can rejoice and those who haven't been yet can set a date – High Street on Market is finally offering dinner service seven days a week (starting at 5 pm).

The dinner menu features a colorful variety of options utilizing sustainably sourced seafood and the best of the region's produce making the dining experience as enjoyable as the ambiance— which is warm, chic and completely worth a visit, but who would expect anything less from a restaurant genius like Ellen Yin?

Dinner menu highlights include LBI scallop crudo (with yuzo kosho and brown butter), brussel sprouts (with peanuts and fish sauce vinaigrette), chicken nuggs (with tempura and torn herbs), glazed pork belly (with charred cabbage, apple and celery root), flat iron steak (with roman gnocchi and mushroom ragout) and scarpinocc (with wild mushrooms, pistachio, grilled corn and goat cheese) just to name a few culinary accolades.

But one menu item certainly brings back some familiar flavors: the Angry Crab Spaghetti. This item was deemed a cult classic and was even credited for "sealing the DNC in 2016 for Philly," by "Billy Penn" and the "New York Times." The dish, made with Old Bay-flavored pasta, Jonah crab, celery leaf and bread crumbs was out of commission for a few years, and now it's back to tickle every Philadelphian's taste-buds in a delicious way.

Metro chatted with Chef Allen Walski to learn more about the new dinner service and the famed Angry Crab Spaghetti.

What can Philadelphians expect from the hyper-seasonal dinner menu now being offered 7 days a week?
The High Street menu is all about the American food experience – iconic dishes and classic flavor combination with a twist – and, as always, very seasonal. We are working with two incredible NJ seafood purveyors that I'm personally so excited about, so we're serving some top-notch fish. The food is approachable and fun. It's a neighborhood restaurant, a place for a quick casual bite, or it's a night-on-the-town kind of place. That's why we want to serve dinner every night of the week.

How would you describe the signature Angry Crab Spaghetti dish for those who have never tried it?
It's like the greatest crab cake that is also a bowl of spaghetti. The pasta has Old Bay in it and Crab — like two peas in a pod. The dish is simple, so clean and it's easy to discern each flavor: a hint of spice, sweet crab and fresh spaghetti.

Why is it such a hit, and why choose now to bring it back?
I wanted to bring it back because our menu is about classics. Our Crab Spaghetti is our iconic dish. When my fiancé and I came to eat here for the first time, a few years back, it blew us away. We both grew up on the Jersey Shore eating seafood and we loved this dish. When I started here I had to ask Chef Eli how it was made. [It's time to] give the people what they want and [make] really great food.

Any other menu items stand out?
I'm a sucker for Brussels sprouts, they're my favorite vegetable. Right now we are doing them with fish sauce vinaigrette, crushed peanuts, a bunch of torn herbs, and some of the loose leaves fried tempura. Also, we've been getting standout oysters from Barnegat Oyster Collective. And for those who don't know us, I'd recommend one of the handmade pastas.

Is there anything else you would want people to know about the new 7-day dinner service, the menu or about High Street on Market overall?
High Street is one of my favorite restaurants. It's the food I want to eat all time - simple with a little adventure. The vibe is great in the dining room. It's just a cool place to be, and High Street Pizzeria is coming back! We're going to do our Pizzeria Night on the first Friday of each month starting in December. To learn more about High Street (308 Market St.) visit highstreetonmarket.com

NFL Week 11 betting: Cardinals at 49ers

The NFL's top underachiever in 2019, the Browns, take on the league's top overachiever, the Steelers, tonight on Thursday Night Football.

It's a highly intriguing betting game, in that both teams' weekly spreads have been out of whack all year. That's to be somewhat expected for two public teams like the Browns and Steelers, but sportsbooks really don't really know what to make of either of them week-to-week in this particular season.

Most books finally got a grasp on Cleveland this past Sunday, when the Browns were three-point favorites over the then-6-2 Bills. The final score? Browns 19, Bills 16.

As crazy as it sounds, the Browns might finally be ready to turn this thing around. It's almost certainly too late for a playoff run, but beating the 5-4 Steelers at home tonight is far from an impossibility.

The Browns have had a brutal schedule over the course of the past month or so as they lost at San Francisco, at home to Seattle, at New England and at Denver. The only loss to a bad team in that grouping was the Broncos, but even that is somewhat excusable considering that Mile High Stadium is one of the more difficult places to play in the league.

The Steelers, on the other hand, have taken advantage of a quirk in their schedule in that they've played just one road game in the past two months. That game was at the Chargers on a Sunday night, where the crowd was 95 percent Pittsburgh fans. It should also be noted that Mason Rudolph did not start that game due to injury, as it was Devlin Hodges that led Pittsburgh the victory over a Chargers squad that was entirely lost at the time.

For all of his faults this year I still trust Baker Mayfield at home, a hell of a lot more than I trust Rudolph on the road.

You can also run on this Steelers defense, which is allowing 105.3 yards per game on the ground (16h in the NFL). Expect the tag team of Nick Chubb and the recently reinstated Kareem Hunt to thrive.

The play: Browns -2.5

Best bets

When these teams last met on Halloween night, the Arizona Cardinals covered as big home underdogs against the previously-undefeated San Francisco 49ers, who are licking their wounds following an overtime loss to the Seahawks on Monday night.

Bet on this game now at MetroBet.us/Sugar and get a free $50 VISA gift card and up to $250 in free betting cash.

Bettors should expect the Cardinals, who are 5-1 against the spread in their last six overall, to give the embattled 49ers another good game. Arizona brings a bottom-five defense by most metrics into this affair but San Francisco's offense could be short a running back (Matt Breida, ankle) and wide receiver (Emmanuel Sanders, ribs) along with star tight end George Kittle (knee). Meanwhile, the Cardinals can sic Kenyan Drake and David Johnson after the Niners' 18th-rated rush defense, setting up quarterback Kyler Murray for another fine day through the air. The rookie signal caller was 17-of-24 for 241 yards and two TDs against San Fran just two weeks ago.

The play: Cardinals +11.5

JOE PANTORNO

Major League Baseball commissioner Rob Manfred. GETTY IMAGES

When flipping through the annals of Major League Baseball's storied history, there is its fair share of black marks upon the game.

Game-fixing and gambling ran rampant in its earliest days — culminating with the infamous "Black Sox Scandal" of 1919 when the Chicago White Sox threw the World Series against the Cincinnati Reds.

Seventy years later, it was on the national forefront again when the game's greatest hitter, Pete Rose, for betting on baseball while playing and managing — including games he participated in.

Gambling and game-fixing have long been the epitome of unforgivable acts within the game with steroids joining the fold in recent decades. But now, Major League Baseball and commissioner Rob Manfred has a new crisis on hand.

An explosive report from Ken Rosenthal and Evan Drellich of The Athletic, released on Tuesday, revealed that the Houston Astros electronically stole signs during their World Series-winning season in 2017.

Ex-Astros players and staff, including pitcher Mike Fiers, told The Athletic that the Astros used a camera in center field during home games to steal signs in real-time and quickly relay the findings to the dugout.

Stealing signs has always been a part of the game with the most famous alleged instance coming in 1951 when the New York Giants aided Bobby Thomson's "Shot Heard 'Round the World" to win the National League pennant in the final matchup of a three-game playoff against the Brooklyn Dodgers.

While some believe it provides an unfair advantage, stealing signs is not illegal. If a player or coach can pick up on a sign or pitcher's tip, that's fair game.

It is illegal, however, to use electronic devices to aid in said sign-stealing — which is what the Astros clearly did. MLB passed that rule in 2001.

It is unclear at this time if the Astros continued using these methods over the past two years.

Houston is not the only team that has been accused of — or caught — doing this. Also, in 2017, the Red Sox were found to be using Apple Watches in the dugout to relay stolen signs to the team.

Manfred and Major League Baseball cannot waste much time letting such accusations and reports float around without taking action. The commissioner must be swift and precise while making an example of the Astros to send a message to the rest of the league.

Even if that means taking the unprecedented action of vacating their 2017 World Series championship.

It would allow Manfred to get back into the good graces of baseball fans as the game is facing a bit of an identity crisis.

After a season in which baseballs were considered "juiced," leading to a record of home runs hit in a single season, many believe the league reverted to its old, dead baseballs in the postseason.

That topic quickly took the back burner, however, after a dismal display of umpiring during the World Series that will only accelerate the use of an automated strike zone.

The "Robo Umps" have been used in Independent Baseball with promising results.

It is slated to be one of the topics of conversation this winter that would also include MLB instituting the three-batter minimum rule for relievers — effectively ending the era of left-handed specialists.

The 40-man roster will also be no more, as teams will only be allowed to expand to 28 players in September.

Manfred's dreaded pace-of-play tweaks could also see the tabling of an asinine rule that automatically puts runners on second base during extra-inning, regular-season games to speed things up. Though that one is a longshot for now.

All of those ideas to speed up the game and make it more appealing for fans with short attention spans needs to be put to the side for now.

Major League Baseball has an epidemic on its hands with electronic sign stealing and Manfred needs to ensure that the game can keep its soul rather than make it quicker.

Notice is hereby given that Broad and Spruce Associates is submitting a Notice of Intent to Remediate (NIR) the property located at 311 South Broad Street in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection (PADEP) as outlined in the Pennsylvania Land Recycling and Environmental Remediation Standards Act (Act 2). Broad and Spruce Associates has decided to request Act 2 liability protection for soil beneath the property in an area of a former underground storage tank (UST). The UST was observed to be in poor condition and approximately two feet of a slurry of heating oil and water was observed within the excavation; however, post-excavation soil sample analyses did not yield results above the PADEP Residential Statewide Health Standards (SHS) Medium Specific Concentrations (MSCs). Broad and Spruce Associates intends to demonstrate attainment of Residential SHS MSCs for soil by excavation of visually impacted soils. Any comments should be submitted to the Department of Environmental Protection, Southeast Regional Office, Land Recycling/Cleanup Division, 2 East Main Street, Norristown, Pennsylvania 19401. This notice is made under the provision of the Land Recycling and Environmental Remediation Standards Act, the Act of May 19, 1995, P.L.#4, No.2.

The volatile organic compound tetrachloroethylene was detected in the groundwater beneath the property, and the metals lead and arsenic were detected in the soils beneath the property. York Partners OZ L.P. intends to demonstrate attainment of Residential Statewide Health Standards or Site-Specific Standards for soil by excavation of impacted soils, and Residential Statewide Health Standards or Site-Specific Standards for groundwater by collection of quarterly groundwater attainment data.
